One Nation March

By Rena Finsmith

On Saturday, October 29th, WCT members loaded onto a coach bus and started their journey to “March on Washington.”

As we got closer to D.C., my excitement elevated as this was my first time to Washington, D.C. Paul Nostrand and Diane DiChiara started to pass out our AFT shirts to wear that day. If you wanted to know who had the better arm you will have to ask them. To make sure that no one got lost, our fearless leader, Pasquale, needed to make sure he had all our phone numbers. As this process was going on, Martha and I decided to teach him the young hip phrase - “Can I get your digits?”

At RFK stadium our bus #846 (we tried to convince the worker to give us #845 for obvious reasons) finally parked and was immediately met with a warm welcome. We took a group picture and passed out our lunch for the day and we were on our way to walk towards the Metro Station.

As we walked towards the Lincoln Memorial we passed many groups and their organizations as well as many signs. Signs discussed jobs, teachers, healthcare, war, and the newest controversy “Waiting for Superman.” Many people were dressed as Superman. We heard speakers like the Reverend Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson.

Alyson McCarroll, Theresa Stowell, and myself decided to walk up and see Lincoln’s Memorial up close and personal. The first way we tried, we were denied, but with Theresa leading the way we were on our way up the stairs. As we walked into where Lincoln’s statue is, I immediately felt goosebumps. As I turned around and looked towards the Washington Monument, I couldn’t help but think that I am standing on the same hallowed ground as some of the most prominent figures in history. I was left speechless.

The day unfortunately came to an end, but I must say that this was a great opportunity and experience. I hope—if there is a next time—that more members of the WCT join in. As I reflect on the day’s events, the sites I saw, the messages I read, and the speeches I heard, I came away with the feeling that I was part of something so special and so unique. Even with all the issues, problems, highs and lows, these people met in Washington as strangers but yet somehow left UNITED for a cause. That cause is for a better life for their children, grandchildren, and better life for you and I. So I ask you what President John F. Kennedy asked us back in 1961, “Ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country.” Get out there, vote, support your local, state, and national governments as well as our union the Wappingers Congress of Teachers, and most importantly teach the future of America that they should get involved.

As an immigrant, it was very important for me to march in Washington on October 2nd in solidarity with other hard-working American men and women. In 1971, I left my birthplace, Gallo Matese Provincia di Caserta, hoping to build a better life for myself and my future family. America (a beautiful Italian word), gave me that opportunity and more. Education with old-world values instilled by my family, afforded me the privilege to work and prosper. Coming together in Washington as middle-class, working families that have built this nation to the symbol of hope it represents today, rendering our voices meaningful and powerful for the future of this country. This was not only an honor, but also a duty to remind the elected officials in Washington of the dignity of labor. It is unfortunate that the bottom line has forced many American companies to transport jobs overseas and produce, in many instances, products of lesser-quality. We must embark on an endeavor to promote and restore the manufacturing of goods and services within our borders to re-establish the workforce in order to revitalize the economy. As a nation, we should regard unions as in the past, not as liabilities but as assets.

I decided I would march in the early spring when I heard Randi Weingarten, President of the AFT, speak at an ED 13 meeting. It was my chance to not only use my mouth but my feet. Weingarten called on NYSUT members to turn out in force to support public education. I believe in public education. I believe that it was meant to be the great equalizer for all children in this country. I believe that whether you live in New Orleans or Fishkill the quality of a public education should be equally rigorous. As the months passed I began to hear more about this One Nation March for not just education, but jobs and social justice. The connection made sense to me. A week before the march Waiting for Superman was released and I knew I had made the right decision to take 24 hours of my weekend and actively express my support for not only my students but also my colleagues. As an active member of the WCT, I have seen that teacher unions don’t just protect teachers; they protect students.

Why I marched on 10/2/10: Although I am not a teacher, I have worked for 22 years in the public school system, mostly as Secretary to the Superintendent. In that time I have seen how the education field is having more and more demands placed on it, teachers being under attack for things they cannot control and funding being pulled away. Teaching is a very important job and a difficult one. New York State is one of the most stringent states for certification of teachers. As in any profession, there are always a handful that are not the best. Unfortunately, those are the ones everyone seems to hear about. I marched in support of the public education system, to make our voices heard to improve our education system and to support the unions. Unions are fighting to get more money for our schools and improve education for all of our youth, our future.

I marched on Oct 2nd to show solidarity and support unions in general and teacher unions in particular. In recent times tenure, teachers and their unions have been under attack and portrayed as the "problem" in public education. This attack, I feel, is unjust unwarranted and grossly misleading to the public. Teachers in public school systems must teach to a variety of students with varying backgrounds, ethnic customs, home situations and levels of abilities. To say this is challenging is an understatement. Tenure is nothing more than a guarantee of due process rights which every worker should be entitled to. We are not in a production oriented business where your job is secure as long as your are generating a profit for your employer. This is why tenure and unions are of particular importance to educators as we continue to be guided by what is truly best for each and every student.

I marched on 10-2-10 because I was one of the teachers who lost their job at the end of the school year last year. Thankfully, I am back to work teaching 8th grade ELA at Van Wyck. I am currently in a long term leave position. I felt it was important to make my voice and presence known in Washington as one of the teachers who was faced with layoffs and the uncertainty that it brings. Life for me this summer was stressful and daunting not knowing where or if I would be working the following school year. The dilemma of paying my bills and saving money was at the forefront of my mind. AFT and our local union have been very supportive in all their efforts. It was my duty to stand beside them in Washington. It was an amazing day and I feel blessed to have been part of history that day. I bonded with my colleagues and created new memories. Thanks everyone for a great day!

I marched because I believe that I have the responsibility to show my solidarity with other Americans who are concerned about the state of the US economy and its impact on public education. I am thankful that I am a citizen of a country where I have the right to peaceably assemble and express free speech.

Lauren Korz, ELA Teacher, RCK
On the Job: 5 years

I went on the trip to D.C. because I am a strong believer in unions. As an educator I feel that our country needs to better support education. I feel that teachers are misrepresented and the media/public views us negatively. The focus is on “bad” teachers and not the majority of us who do a wonderful job! As a whole, our country needs to come together to rebuild our economy. As a citizen of this country, I felt that this was an opportunity for me to voice my concerns.

Rena Finsmith, Special Education Teacher, JJHS

I marched on 10/2/10 because I preach to my students that they have certain rights that are given to them and that there are people in our past, present, and future who fight for these rights that we all have. It is important to practice what you preach and this was a wonderful opportunity to show my students that no matter what background, race, age, etc. you can be apart of something and take a stand. It is when we are silent that these issues continue to exist and grow. Marching on Washington allowed me the opportunity to stand where many great historical figures stood. The March on Washington brought together many different causes such as jobs, healthcare, justice, equal rights, and education. Talking to and with the other marchers and having them tell their stories were just as important as the guest speakers that day. Marching on Washington allowed me and my fellow marchers to take part in standing up for those causes and hoping that more people will get involved and of course go out and exercise their right to vote.

I marched because I wanted a free trip to DC. Just kidding.... With what happened last year with all of the layoffs I thought that it was important for us as teachers to support our union for all that they do for us. I know that I was lucky because it doesn’t directly affect me but you never know one day. We need to be concerned with giving the children what they need, that is a good education. Which means no lay offs for teachers. It is time for the government to step it up!

CAPS FOR GOOD
YOUR HANDMADE CAP CAN HELP SAVE A LIFE!

Two years ago the WCT and the WCRT took part in “Save the Children’s” Knit one Save one Campaign making hundreds of caps for babies.

“Save the Children” is once again accepting baby caps for newborn health programs in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Nearly 4 million babies die each year in their first month of life – half within their first 24 hours and mostly from preventable or treatable causes. In many developing countries, something as simple as a knit or crocheted cap can help the baby keep warm, which is key to helping newborns survive.

Visit www.GoodGoes.org/caps for cap patterns and to see how caps are making a difference in the lives of mothers and children around the world.

Send completed caps to Chris Romano at Myers Corners Elementary School.

Local Students, Teachers, and Parents Participate in a Ten Day Walking Challenge

Kinry Road School and Oak Grove School will be participating in a ten day walking challenge during the last two weeks of October. The goal is to motivate students to increase their level of physical activity outside of physical education class. Physical Education teachers, Anne Seymour and Dawn Turpin-Orgetas coordinated the NYS Healthy Steps Program in their schools over the past several years. But unfortunately this program lost its funding and no longer exists.

But that didn't stop Turpin-O. and Seymour. Together they made a plan to challenge Oak and Kinry students, staff members, and their families to compete in a contest to see which school could do the most walking over the ten day period from October 18 to 27. Both schools kicked off the program with a walk over the Scenic Hudson Walkway after school on Monday. Marley Brothers, a P.E. student teacher at Oak Grove, showed her school spirit by completing the walk in full costume. She was dressed as a squirrel representing the school mascot for Oak Grove.

Students will be participating in special activities at school during P.E. class and recess to increase the number of steps students take. Students will be learning about healthy nutritional choices, the benefits of walking, measuring heart rates, and leading a healthy, physically active lifestyle. The P.E. teachers expect this energizing event to bring families together to achieve a common goal. Parents and family members who walk with a Kinry or Oak student will be able to include their steps toward the school total as well.
